NEA Teacher Quality Webinars

Join NEA Teacher Quality in our professional development series intended to address the needs and questions educators may have as we look towards a post-pandemic teaching and learning environment where the impact on our students, our school districts, and ourselves may linger. We will seek to answer the question, how do we take care of students and ourselves while continuing to grow professionally?

Student-Centered Learning: Providing Opportunities for Voice and Choice

July 20, 2021, 7:00-8:00 p.m. CT

Create and present student-centered lessons and empower students through voice and choice as the teacher co-designs the instructions with them. As every student learns differently, they become educational system stakeholders, developing a larger buy-in to their own education and contributing to their student achievement and success.

Understanding Students and Anger

July 27, 2021, 7:00-8:00 p.m. CT

Discover how to better serve students in a more positive way, to de-escalate anger, and foster a more constructive relationship with the student.

Speak Up!: Confronting White Nationalism in the Classroom

August 3, 2021, 7:00-8:00 p.m. CT

Many young people have been spending unprecedented amounts of time alone online and away from the communities that give them a sense of belonging. With racist conspiracy theories about COVID-19 spreading widely and anxieties about racial justice protests mounting, white nationalist groups are taking advantage of this moment to target young people with racist, misogynistic and anti-Semitic rhetoric. This training will prepare educators to respond to such rhetoric—and the bigoted organizing behind it—when it makes its way into classrooms.
